

Installation Instructions:

1. Turn off water to the water filter before proceeding.
2. Remove the filter sump housing from the filter head/cap by unscrewing the housing from the head. Many filters include a wrench that can be used to assist in unscrewing the housing if it is too tight to remove by hand. Some water may leak from the filter, as the housing will be full of water when removing. Place a bucket underneath the filter housing during removal to prevent wetting the floor (if water is properly turned off, no water will be running during removal).
3. Remove the old o-ring from the top of the filter housing, near the threads. If the filter cartridge is also being replaced, remove the old cartridge and replace with a new cartridge at this time.
4. Place the new o-ring into the same position as the old o-ring. Wet the new o-ring with some water to lubricate it for re-installation. Silicone-based grease can also be used, but wetting the o-ring is typically enough to install without pinching the o-ring.
5. Re-install the filter sump housing by screwing it into the filter head/cap. Thread the housing into the head by hand until it is snug, allowing the o-ring to create a tight seal between the filter sump housing and the filter head/cap. If preferred, the wrench provided with your filter housing can be used to tighten the filter housing slightly more than "hand-tight".
6. Turn the water back on to the filter to resume service. Observe the fixture for leaks upon turning the water back on.

This chart shows replacement o-ring compatibility for the o-ring that sits between the sump housing (the bottom half of the filter that contains the filter cartridge) and the filter cap (the top of the filter that the housing screws into). Sample image of an o-ring fitted to a filter sump housing below. Your filter housing may look larger or smaller than this sample image, and may be a different color. The sample image below is only meant to display where the o-ring goes in your filter.
