13 Support & Pairing Up

Allied units can co-operate in battle when they are adjacent or on the same square.

Building Relationships

Co-operating in battle helps build relationships between units. Once units start to get along, they can have support conversations (p. 7), which increase their support level and boost the effect of co-op attacks.

- ◆ Some units simply don't get along and their support level won't increase.
- ◆ The highest support level is "S". A unit can be at "S" support level with only one unit of the opposite sex.

Support Unit

When a unit engages the enemy while an allied unit is on an adjacent square, the following may happen:

Dual Support

Your unit's Hit Rate and Avoidance will be temporarily boosted. The more the units get along, the higher the boost.

- ◆ The effect on the unit's attributes will be greatest when it is surrounded by allies on all four adjacent squares.

Dual Strike

There is a set chance that the adjacent unit will launch a follow-up attack.

- ◆ If there is more than one unit standing next to the active unit, the one with the highest support level will join the attack.

Dual Guard

There is a set chance that the adjacent unit will protect the active unit from damage.

- ◆ If there is more than one unit standing next to the active unit, the one with the highest support level will protect the active unit.

Pairing Up

When one unit moves onto the same square as another allied unit, they will pair up. In addition to the effects that occur when two units stand next to each other, the abilities of the main unit (the one that was on the square before the other joined) will be greatly enhanced.

- ◆ When units pair up, only the main unit can move, attack and defend. When a paired-up unit is attacked, the main unit is the enemy's target.

Paired-Up Commands

Select SWITCH to switch the main unit. The pair will not be able to move in that turn after switching. You can also trade items between the units, or exchange the paired-up unit with another one that is on an adjacent square. To separate the units, select SEPARATE and place one of the units on an adjacent square.

Units become stronger as they gain experience in battle.

Experience Points & Levelling Up

Units are awarded EXP (experience points) for participating in combat or using staves. Once a unit gains 100 EXP, they will level up and get stronger.

Class Change

Units level 10 or higher can use a Master Seal to change to a more advanced class. In addition, units that are level 10 or advanced classes can use a Second Seal to change to an entirely different class. Using any of these Seals will reset the unit's level to 1.

15 System menu

Press (A) when the cursor is on an empty square or on a unit that has already finished its turn to display the System menu.

- ◆ For Guide and Options, check the Preparations menu (p. 7).
